This second edition offers step-by-step instruction for supervisors of novice counselors. The book is divided into three major parts. The first part, "Introduction and Ethical Framework," contains an introduction in which commitment to supervisor and counselor development is discussed. Chapter 2 provides ethical guidelines for supervisors as they work with counselors in training. The second part, "Supervision Strategies and Case Conceptualization," explores supervision strategies and the case conceptualization model. Chapter 3 describes basic supervision strategies, illustrating each with a vignette. A description of a model of case conceptualization and advanced supervision strategies that combine teaching, counseling, and consulting function are included in chapter 4. The final section, "Practicum Course Outline and Supervision Modules," provides the setting for supervision: a practicum course for first-year counseling students. The first term, outlined in chapter 5, focuses on building a relationship with clients, and delineates plans for each week. It is suggested that each class should include and describe weekly sessions in detail. Vignettes illustrate supervision in action. The second term, outlined in chapter 6, focuses on conceptualization of cases and the process of counseling. Contains 154 references. (Author/MKA)

The Case of Former British Colonial Bamenda, Present-day North-west Province of the Republic of Cameroon, 1916-1996

Each year the U.S. Department of Agriculture (USDA) must estimate the number of people who are eligible to participate in the Special Supplemental Nutrition Program for Women, Infants, and Children (WIC). These USDA estimates have come under critical scrutiny in part because the number of infants and postpartum women who have actually enrolled in the program has exceeded the number estimated to be eligible by as much as 20 to 30 percent. These high "coverage rates" have led some members of Congress to conclude that some people who participate are truly ineligible, and that funding could be reduced somewhat and still meet the needs of truly eligible persons who wish to participate. But some advocates and state WIC agencies believe that the estimates of the number of eligible persons are too low and more people who are eligible and want to participate could do so. In response to these concerns, the Food and Nutrition Service (FNS) of the USDA asked the Committee on National Statistics of the National Research Council to convene a panel of experts to review the methods used to estimate the number of people nationwide who are eligible and likely to participate in the WIC program. The panel's charge is to review currently used and alternative data and methods for estimating income eligibility, adjunctive eligibility from participation in other public assistance programs, nutritional risk, and participation if the program is fully funded. Romanzi brings a fresh perspective to readers interested in vaginal rejuvenation, pelvic floor conditions, and female sexual function. The illustrated guide includes detailed information on vaginal reconstructive surgery and explains how to avoid a hysterectomy.

In 1991, the National Center for Children in Poverty undertook a study of low-income parents as child care consumers. The study involved a review of current research findings, interviews with staff of child resource and referral agencies, and an examination of child care consumer education provided in the Job Opportunities and Basic Skills (JOBS) program. This report presents the results of these inquiries. Chapter I identifies sources of consumer information on child care. Three public subsidy programs discussed are the Family Support Act, Child Care and Development Block Grant, and the Title IV-A At-Risk Child Care Program. Chapter II considers parents as child care consumers, examining the ways parents search for child care, the kinds of child care families use and the kinds they really want, and the child care characteristics that satisfy parents. In chapter III, the same issues are examined with respect to low-income parents. In addition, constraints facing low-income child care users, including transportation problems, time constraints, lack of money and expertise, and problems related to cultural differences, are discussed. Finally, chapter IV focuses on the provision of child care consumer education, identifying essential program features, points in time when consumer education should be provided, delivery methods, and information provided to JOBS participants. The JOBS child care consumer education report is appended. (AC)
